Since being elected to be part of the General Assembly, what have you done to represent the student voice in the chamber and in other relevant circumstances?

Since being a part of the general assembly, I have been able to meet with many groups within the College of Arts and Sciences. One of the groups I've had the privilege to engage with is the Council on Minority Political Affairs. Through these interactions, I had the opportunity to gather valuable data on how students within our college feel about the way class advising is handled.

Our discussions with the Council on Minority Political Affairs revealed important insights into the concerns and perspectives of minority students when it comes to academic advising. I learned that many students, particularly those from underrepresented backgrounds, face unique challenges and often require additional support and resources to navigate their academic journey successfully.

This data has been instrumental in helping us identify areas for improvement within our college's advising system. It has encouraged us to explore initiatives that ensure that all students, regardless of their background, receive the necessary guidance and support to make informed academic choices. As a result, I will be actively working on implementing changes and programs to address these concerns and make the advising process more equitable and accessible for all students. This collaborative effort between the general assembly and groups like the Council on Minority Political Affairs is a significant step towards fostering an inclusive and supportive academic environment within our college.
